THE TEXT

1. Pascaline lives in a poor neighborhood in Niamey, the capital of Niger. It's a tough place for children to grow up, but it's even more challenging for girls, thousands of whom have seen their childhoods cut short by marriage.
2. The contents of Pascaline's backpack offer a glimpse into the aspirations of the young Nigerien girl. For years, Pascaline has been collecting football jerseys even though most of them are still too big for her to wear. Pascaline's mother laughs as her daughter talks enthusiastically about her dream of playing football in Spain. But Pascaline remains defiant: "Whoever says that football is only for boys, my friends and I are proving them wrong."
3. For Pascaline, football is about much more than just fun. When her parents had to take her out of school because they could no longer afford to pay the school fees, it helped get her education back on track. When a football school was recruiting out-of-school girls to play for a team with the aim of getting them back into class, she studied hard for the entrance exam and was given a spot. "My life took a turn I didn't expect," she says smiling.
4. Pascaline's teacher says that the pupils are hugely engaged with their studies. "My students come to all my classes with their homework completed," she says. But, while studying is the priority, the teacher admits that football keeps pupils motivated to learn. "School sports have added a value for girls because they are the most vulnerable ones," she says.
